

Invitation to join the Hawke's Bay Branch of the Royal Society Te Apārangi

The Royal Society Te Apārangi is an independent, statutory, not-for-profit body in New Zealand that promotes, recognises excellence in, provides funding for and expert advice on, science, technology and the humanities. In addition to direct members and fellows, its membership includes many national constituent organisations and regional societies.

The Royal Society advances and promotes science and technology in New Zealand, recognises and encourages excellence in research, supports education, provides expert advice to guide public policy and publishes scientific journals, reports and educational resources. It administers research grants, fellowships, awards and prizes. You'll find more information on the Royal Society website at: www.royalsociety.org.nz.

The Hawke's Bay Branch of the Royal Society is one of the regional societies of the Royal Society Te Apārangi. We are active in the advancement and the public understanding of science, technology and the humanities, particularly through the delivery of lectures to members and the general public of Hawke's Bay. From time to time, we also assist other science promotion activities and support the teaching of science, technology, engineering and mathematics in local schools. For more information about our activities, please visit the Hawke's Bay Branch website at: <http://hawkesbay.rsnzbranch.org.nz/>.
